SPECIAL NOTICE.
HAVING MADE ARRANGEMENTS TO CHANGE OUR LOCATION ON THE FIRST OF SEPTEMBER, WE WILL SELL OUR ENTIRE STOCK OF LAIDLES, MISSEY AND CHILDREN'S KINE
BOOTS & SHOES AT COST!
I am led to supplement this narrative by a word or two in defence of the military propriety of moving into the cut by the strictures which your District Attorney and one of your daily papers have been pleased to make upon me for having selected the route for my advance into the town. Raw recruits run greater risks from having their formation destroyed and the confusion incident upon broken alignments than from any other cause. Had the mob succeeded in breaking its formation, the Fourth regiment might itself have degenerated into a mob and would have been completely at the mercy of the rioters. This might have been accomplished had we been in a wide street where the mob could press upon our flanks, but in the cut it was impossible, as our flanks were clear, our formation was preserved, the men had room to use their rifles with reasonable effect, and we emerged from the cut without the loss of a single soldier. I think I can safely rely upon the result of the battle with the mob as the most unanswerable argument against the theory of a military blunder. In accordance with your request I send this letter as a sworn statement.

WEDNESDAY EVENING, AUGUST 1.

Fight with the Reading Mob.
Geo. S. Goodheart, Reading, Pa.:
DEAR SIR: Your notification, dated July 27, bearing certain inquiries to which you desire replies, was duly received by me. While I do not for one moment concede your right to demand such replies from me at this time, while I know perfectly well that my official report of the occurrences at Reading on the 23d inst. to my superior officers is the only account which I can at this time be required to make, I am nevertheless quite willing to furnish you with whatever information is in my possession calculated to throw light upon the subject matter now under official investigation by you. To that end I reply categorically to your questions as follows:

Q. Who ordered your command to this place? A. I was ordered to Reading with the Fourth regiment of my brigade by Major General Wm. J. Bolton, commanding Second division, National Guards, Pennsylvania.

Q. Who gave you orders to march through the cut to Seventh and Penn streets? A. I received no orders to march through the cut, but I was requested to march into the cut to liberate a train in the possession of the rioters by an official of the Reading Railroad Company.

Q. Who ordered you to fire upon the crowd? A. No person ordered me to fire, neither did I fire nor direct any other person to fire upon the crowd.

Q. Which of the companies discharged their guns, and how often? A. All the companies did firing, but no living creature can give the further information desired.

Q. Did you acquiesce in the High Sheriff of this county with your coming and presence in the city? If not, why not? A. I did not; it was not my duty to acquiesce with my coming, and it was while I was proceeding in the direction of the High Sheriff's house that my command was attacked by the mob; upon receiving orders to retreat to Reading, I took care with my command at Altoona, and proceeded without incident to Reading, where the train was boarded by Messrs. Elie and Paxson, railroad officials; these gentlemen informed me that the Reading depot was in possession of a mob numbering from two to three thousand. I desired them to stop the train just out of sight of the depot, which being done I disembarked the troops, and having formed we marched to the depot, finding it in the hands and under protection of the coal and iron police. I was then requested to release a train from the hands of the strikers and was informed that this cut was the direct road to the Penn street crossing, which it was necessary to clear to permit the running of trains. I moved my command in the direction of the cut; but before reaching it we were met by a large body of men whose violent gestures, coarse insults, unspoken threats and general bearing suggested the idea of halting the regiment, leading the pieces and moving the musicians to the rear.

Before entering the cut we were saluted by the crowd with a volley of stones and some pistol shots. We moved down the cut, stoned at every step by a yelling mob, while firing a shot or speaking a word in reply to the shouts which almost deafened us, until we reached the second bridge. During the march, I, seconded by all the other officers of the command, constantly cautioned the men not to fire, notwithstanding that every step was being marked by the blood of the men, and that many of the troops had been knocked down by the flying stones.

Near the second bridge a single shot, fired without orders, was the signal for a dropping fire, which, while doing little or no damage to the mob of rioters, served to check the last falling shower of stones. Pressing on, the command reached Penn street and was confronted by a large crowd of persons, who met us by hurling stones and firing pistols at the regiment, which was only stopped by what I have since learned was a very effective volley, which entirely dispersed them. Not a single shot was fired by us on Penn street, either up or down; nor was there a single shot fired after the last halt was made by us on Seventh street.
